2012 LEGISLATIVE SESSION ANALYSIS

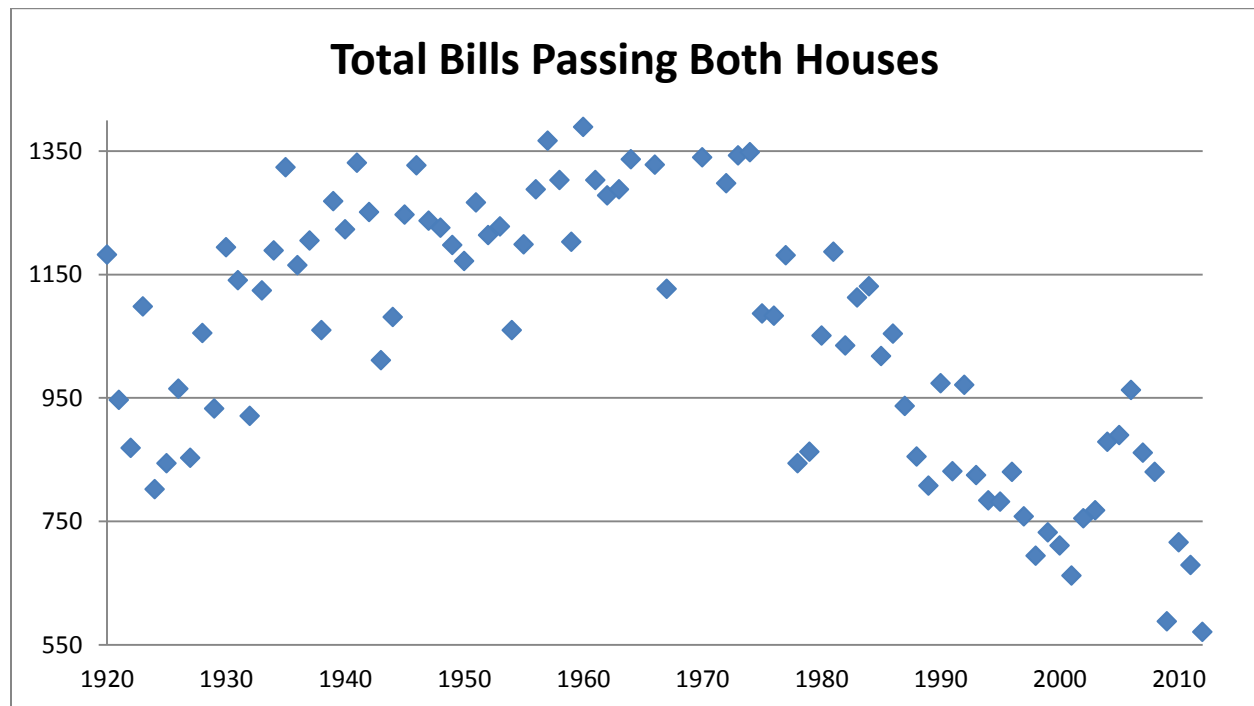

As part of an ongoing review of legislative activity, the following analysis examines the 2012 New York legislative session. This analysis does not draw conclusions on the substance of bills or a particular legislator’s impact, or the overall legislative output, since legislative “productivity” is more complicated and subjective than simple numbers. It is up to New Yorkers to assess their legislators’ effectiveness and impact. In order to be informed New Yorkers deserve information on the functioning of their Legislature and we hope that the following information will stimulate dialogue between lawmakers and their constituents.

Fewer bills have passed in 2012 than in any other full calendar year examined in the above chart. Of course, the Legislature could return this year and increase the total number of bills passed, conceivably moving beyond 2009’s full year total.

Numbers from earlier years reveal that the current 2012 total is actually lower than any year since at least 1914.¹ The general trend in recent years indicates a gradual decline in the number of bills passing both houses.

Decade	Average Two-House Bills per Year
1920s	955
1930s	1,159
1940s	1,213
1950s	1,230
1960s	1,363
1970s	1,192
1980s	1,019
1990s	818
2000s	791
2010s (so far)	655

Some of this decrease may be due to the increasing import of the state budget. In 1969, one of the years with the highest number of bills passed, the budget was 577 pages. In 2012, it was 2,890. While much of this increase is due to the dramatic growth in government spending, there appears to be a trend toward including a greater number of issues in the annual budget's appropriation and Article VII bills, thus increasing the length of the budget bills and reducing the number of policy changes which may have passed as separate bills.

¹ For the entirety of this report, numbers from 1995-2012 were obtained from the New York State Legislative Bill Drafting Commission, via LRS. Totals for the years from 1920-1994 were obtained from George E. Mitchell, Editor, The New York Red Book (Guilderland, NY: New York Legal Publishing Corp, 1999). Partial totals from earlier than 1920 were found in the legislature's annual digests. These only contained numbers for bills which were signed into law. From 1915-1919, the number of bills which were signed into law was higher than 2012's total of 571 bills passing both houses. In 1914, 532 bills were signed into law. Depending on the number of vetoes, the total number passing both houses may or may not have been higher than 2012's, hence the use of the phrase "at least."

The most significant reason for the gradual decline in recent decades is likely due to a relative stasis in the expansion of areas that are deemed as governable. The years in which these numbers peaked were those which coincided with the most fervent periods of expansionism, specifically the Little New Deal, the post-war boom years, and Governor Rockefeller's unprecedented increases in state spending. Some of the new areas in which the state began to legislate were due directly to opportunities for federal grants, such as increases in welfare and housing. Others, such as environmental protection and funding for higher education, were not directly tied to federal requirements, but grew out of similar philosophies about the role of the state government in society. New legislation became necessary to establish these programs, and additional bills were often passed in subsequent years to fix problems in these nascent state programs. As the programs matured, they entered into a more settled status, which required less frequent adjustment. In recent decades, the state has entered fewer new fields of governance, driven largely by the increase in popular support for smaller government which began to bloom in the late 1970s and and most recently driven by a lack of funds due to the recent economic downturn.

Total Bill Introductions, 2011-2012

14,578 bills were introduced in both houses in 2011, 12,293 of which were still active in 2012.³ 3,809 new bills were introduced in 2012. Of the 571 bills which passed both houses in 2012, 150 were holdovers from the previous year, and 421 were first introduced in the second year of the session.⁴

Assemblymember Englebright has introduced more bills than any other legislator over the course of the current two-year session. Senator Kruger, despite resigning in 2011, introduced more bills than any other member of his house.

House	Member	Bills Introduced 2011	Bills Introduced 2012	Total Two-Year Bill Introductions
A	Englebright	343	32	375
S	KRUGER	372	0	372
S	GOLDEN	223	78	301

² Totals for 2007 are incorporated entirely in the average for Governor Paterson, who presided over 94.81% of the bills which passed that year.

³ This represents legislation introduced under separate bill numbers and does not count amended versions as additional bill introductions.

⁴ Thus, a total of 16,102 bills were active at some point in 2012, 571 of which passed both houses. While it may be tempting to claim that this means that 3.55% of all bills ultimately passed both houses, one must keep in mind that each two-house passage ultimately requires one bill in each house, so a more accurate number would be 7.10%.

Bills Passing at Least One House

In the Senate, Republicans passed significantly more bills through their chamber (33.21 per member) than Democrats (3.32 bills per member).

Senator Duane was the only member of his chamber who passed no bills through at least one house.

Conference	Members	Bills Passed Senate	Average per Member
Democrats	25	83	3.32
Independent Democrats	4	58	14.5
Republicans	33	1096	33.21
Other: Introduced by "Budget" or "Rules"		19

In the Assembly, the minority passed a significantly higher proportion of bills per member, though there is still a notable disparity.

Ten (10) Assembly Republicans and one (1) Assembly Democrat (Boyland) passed no bills through their house.

Conference	Members	Bills Passed Assembly	Average per Member

I	99.13%	98.01%	99.52%
R	98.83%	96.93%	98.07%

As the above chart indicates, the Independent Democrats were the Senate's most unified conference, voting the same as their leader 99.52% of the time.

The Senate Democrats were the least unified, voting with Sampson 94.51% of the time. While two members (Smith and Breslin) almost always voted the same way as their leader, Republicans and members of the IDC were far more likely to find agreement. Only three of the 25 members who voted with him the most frequently belonged to his conference; eight of the ten members who differed from Sampson the most frequently were Democrats.

Senator Duane's votes differed from each of the three leaders more than any other Senator, voting with Skelos 83.97% of the time, Sampson 85.42%, and Klein 84.18%.

⁵ The rankings are based both on the percentage of total votes and the total number of votes cast the same way as Silver. Though six members always voted the same way as the Speaker, five of them are not ranked in a tie for first place since they missed at least one vote.

Governor Cuomo

The number of Governor Cuomo’s program bills that passed the legislature is comparable to his recent predecessors. However, a much higher percentage of his program bills have passed.

The following chart compares 2012 action on program bills to earlier years. Note that most bills are introduced once in each house, and some are introduced on repeated occasions when the Legislature is in a special session called by the governor, so the numbers of “active program bills” listed below are usually about twice as high as the number of issues that the executive has chosen to take on.

Year	Total Active Program Bills, Both Houses	Total Program Bills Passing Both Houses
2012	58	21
2011	89	16
2010	237	52
2009 ⁶	644	29
2008	101	26
2007	135	16
2006	93	9
2005	146	26
2004	88	8
2003	116	15

Significantly fewer messages of necessity were issued in 2012 than in any other recent year.

Year	Bills Passing Either House with Message of Necessity
2012	5
2011	29
2010	57
2009	43
2008	41
2007	23
2006	39
2005	34
2004	84
2003	58

⁶ In 2009, Governor Paterson reintroduced many of his program bills multiple times, as the Senate spent several weeks in special sessions in which bills needed to be reintroduced daily.
