NYPIRG STATEMENT ON CLIMATE ACTION COUNCIL’S APPROVAL OF ITS SCOPING PLAN

Today the Climate Action Council approved its scoping plan that would tackle the growing climate catastrophe by offering its blueprint for how the state can move to a “green” economy. The plan is ambitious and contains a wide range of policy options for Governor Hochul and the State Legislature to consider during the upcoming legislative session.

The plan contains many good proposals and some not-so-good ideas, but falls short in one key area: holding the oil companies – not New Yorkers – financially responsible for the gigantic costs facing the state. A plan to do so is contained in Senate bill 9417/Assembly bill 10556 (2022 session). That legislation assesses the oil industry $30 billion for climate costs and does so in a way that does not allow the industry to pass those costs onto the public.

The following statement is attributable to Blair Horner, Executive Director for NYPIRG:

"The Climate Action Council's plan is an important step forward in meeting New York's science-based greenhouse gas reduction and renewable power goals. But the plan lets the oil companies off the hook – the industry most responsible for the climate crisis. Any final climate package must require the oil industry to foot the bill, not New Yorkers. The governor and state lawmakers must embrace a climate superfund plan that would raise $30 billion to cover the enormous financial costs the state faces due to rising sea levels, more intense storms, and hotter temperatures.”
